

NEWS > EDUCATION • News

University of La Verne hosts Latino college fair

Over 5,000 students, family members learn about higher education

Sherly Aviles-Morgado, a University of La Verne graduate and first-year experience coordinator, talks to students about higher education Saturday, Sept. 14, 2024, at the National College Resource Foundation Latino College Expo & Educational Fair at the University of La Verne. (Courtesy of University of La Verne)

Listen to this article

More than 5,000 students and families attended a college fair at the University of La Verne.

1 of 2

More than 5,000 students and family members attend the National College Resource Foundation Latino College Expo & Educational Fair at the University of La Verne on Saturday, Sept. 14, 2024. (Courtesy of University of La Verne)

The private university hosted the 11th Annual National College Resource Foundation Latino College Expo & Educational Fair on Saturday, Sept. 14.

The event offered the chance for students and their families to get information and resources about higher-education opportunities, a university news release states.

The event included people such as Sherly Aviles-Morgado, a University of La Verne graduate and first-year experience coordinator. The first-generation college student from Claremont spoke to students, sharing her journey from mentee to mentor and talking to Latino students about higher education.

“When I first attended a college fair like this, I felt at home,” Aviles said in the release. “Now, I want to ensure other students feel the same.”

